

Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm drawn to Product Management because it represents the perfect intersection of what drives me: understanding problems, creating solutions that matter, and guiding teams to bring those solutions to life. My journey as a founder, community builder, and product lead has shown me that I thrive when I'm solving real challenges — not just building products, but building the right products.

I bring a product mind that naturally looks at every situation as a problem to be solved. When I created Split-Wiser, it wasn't about building another bill-splitting app; it was about solving the deeper issue of trust and fairness for roommates and students sharing expenses. By using AI to handle context — partial participation, item-level choices, tax and tips — the product felt less like math and more like a mediator everyone trusted.

The same mindset drove my work with the Entrepreneurship Club at UTA, where I built programs to empower students to act on their ideas. Our flagship, MavMarket, became more than an event — it grew to 130 vendors, generated over $120,000 for student entrepreneurs, and created a lasting culture of innovation on campus.

These experiences reflect how my business skills, entrepreneurial mindset, and technology knowledge make me a strong fit for a Product Management role. I understand how to:

- Identify gaps and validate demand before building.
- Balance user value with business strategy to create scalable impact.
- Collaborate with engineers and designers to turn concepts into products that actually ship.

I'm pursuing Product Management because I want to scale the impact I've already seen firsthand — solving problems for thousands or millions of users, not just hundreds. I believe great products don't just work; they make life easier, create opportunities, and leave people better off than before. That's the type of work I want to lead.

Thank you for considering my application. I'd be excited to bring this mindset, skill set, and energy to a Product Management role and contribute to building products that truly make a difference.

Best regards,

Abhishek Nagaraja

www.abhishekn.in

<https://linkedin.com/in/abhisheknagaraja>